

Congress Must Preserve Six-Day Mail Delivery

The United States Congress has a 30-year unblemished history of supporting six days of delivery and universal service, from President Reagan to President Obama. But now there is an effort to change this longstanding bi-partisan policy.

- Millions of individuals and businesses who receive and send parcels and letters, or who conduct financial transactions on Saturday will be affected.
- Rural America, the elderly, underprivileged, handicapped, and many others depend on six-day delivery for prescription drugs and essential items.
- 172 House Democrats and Republicans have co-sponsored a bi-partisan resolution preserving six-day mail delivery. Representatives who have not signed on, are urged to consider H. Res. 137.

Protect six-day mail delivery—
it's good for business and good for America.
