Dear Brothers and Sisters,

Welcome to the American Postal Workers Union. If you are a USPS employee in the Clerk, Maintenance, Motor Vehicle, or Support Services crafts, the APWU is already working for you.

The APWU will always strive to bring good wages, benefits, and job security to our members. The Union has fought hard for the benefits we all receive. The benefits we enjoy are not given to us voluntarily by the Postal Service—every benefit is fiercely negotiated. In exchange for the value of our labor, the Union strives to secure for its Members the best compensation—compensation that will allow the Members to provide for themselves and their families well into retirement. Some of the benefits you could enjoy brought to you courtesy of the APWU include: Cost-of-Living Adjustments (COLA), healthcare and retirement benefits, annual leave, sick leave, holidays, protection against layoffs and dignity in the workplace. Does this mean there are never any problems in the work place? No, but the Union will be there to assist you whenever and wherever we can.

Our modest union dues make it feasible for the APWU to function as an organization working for you. Your membership in the APWU shows a commitment to working together for better pay and benefits, as well as for dignity and respect on the job. It represents our understanding of the principle of strength through unity, both in demanding our rights on the job and in speaking to our nation's leaders about issues that are important to working Americans.

This book has been designed to provide you with an explanation of some of the benefits available to an APWU Member as well as to let you know where we came from, who we are, and how the American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO works to help you every day of your postal career.

We would be proud to have you as a Member, and with your commitment to join, we will always be fighting for you and with you.

In Union Solidarity,

Mark Dimondstein
President

Anna Smith
Organization Director

Members' Bill of Rights

IN OUR UNION EVERY MEMBER HAS RIGHTS.

THESE RIGHTS ARE LISTED IN THE UNION'S CONSTITUTION:

- 1. Every member has the right to be respected as a human being.
- 2. Every member has the right to be respected as a brother or sister of this Union.
- 3. Every member has the right to freedom of speech and the right to be heard.
- 4. Every member has the right to the freedom to listen.
- 5. Every member has the right to the freedom of the press.
- 6. Every member has the right to participate in the activities of this Union.
- 7. Members shall not be denied the right to seek any office or the right to vote in this Union because of race, color, creed, sex, sexual orientation, nationality, handicap, political affiliation, age or religion.
- 8. Every member has the right to support the candidate of his or her choice and to participate in that right with others.
- 9. Every member has the right to a fair trial, to be represented by an individual of his or her choice and to proper appeal procedures.
- 10. Every member has the right to be secure in his or her basic rights without fear of political, economic, physical or psychological intimidation.

Our mandate to protect the common interests of postal workers and our desire to secure better wages, reasonable hours, and safe working conditions where we work demands that we strive to sign up non-members into our Union.

As a Union we act also to strengthen the labor movement and all issues that improve and promote working class families nationwide. We fight for quality health benefits for our members. Every day the Union works to improve working conditions and safety at the post office. We work to provide help to injured and retired workers. One of our major efforts is to secure a living wage so we can support ourselves and our families. United We Stand ~ Divided We Fall. Which side are you on?

Your Union's Structure

We are an Industrial Union, which means we come from different crafts (clerks, maintenance, and motor vehicle) and from different operations (postal nurses, material handlers, support services). When the APWU was founded, the different craft unions merged into one Industrial Union. The crafts still kept their identity, becoming "Divisions" under the Union's Constitution. Yet all crafts have the same objectives and work to secure a safe and healthy work environment, better working conditions and a better standard of living for all members of the APWU and their families.

Your Union Has A Structure:

LOCALS

Ten (10) or more members in the same postal installation may be chartered as a local. A charter is a legal document that declares workers in a particular post office have formed a union and that union is recognized as a "local" union. A local union serves the members on the work floor as representatives enforcing the union contract. The Local Union has a constitution on how it is to operate, elect officers, conduct union business, how much the member dues are and a host of other issues. Also, each local is autonomous which means you the members have the say on how your local union is run and how it represents the workers.

STATE ORGANIZATIONS

Two (2) or more district councils or five (5) or more locals within a state can form a State level Union representing the locals within a given state. State unions represent postal workers who work at small offices that do not have local unions (these workers are called Members-At-Large). The State Organization also does a great deal of work in the legislative arena.

NATIONAL ORGANIZATION

The Union has a headquarters in Washington, DC. Members everywhere are serviced by national union officers. Those in Washington, DC are called "resident officers" elected by the members of the Union nationwide. Each craft has a director. The crafts include: Clerk, Motor Vehicle Division (MVS), Maintenance and Support Services. There are several Departments which handle specific matters related to union members. Those departments are Industrial Relations, Legislative/Political, Organization, Research and Education, Health Plan, Human Relations, and Retiree's.

The National Union is divided into five regions. There are five elected Regional Coordinators (Eastern, Northeast, Southern, Central and Western) who have jurisdiction over five distinct geographical areas of the country (including American territories). Within each of these regions elected officers, National Business Agents, represent the locals and members within their area.

OFFICERS

Though each local and state organization is autonomous, members in these organizations elect the national union officers by mail in a secret ballot. The current administration through 2016 is:

A Brief History of Our Union

Your Union, the American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO, represents more than 220,000 employees of the U.S. Postal Service who are clerks, maintenance employees, motor vehicle service, support services, nurses and retirees.

Postal unions date back to the 19th Century and parallel the growth of the former Post Office Department.

The early unions had essentially no bargaining rights, preventing them from negotiating with management on working conditions, wages, and the hours of employment. So the unions were lobbying organizations because almost all of a postal employee's work and home life was dependent on the whim of Congress. Not until around 1900 did the American Federation of Labor (a federation of many industrial unions) include the Chicago Postal Union (Local #1), which helped bolster postal worker's efforts to fight for their rights. The struggles for better pay, recognition of the Union by management, better conditions at post offices continued for years without much improvement.

From 1967 to 1969, postal wages did not increase at all, although Congress raised its own pay 41 percent over that period. Working conditions were getting worse, not better. Hours were at the whim of management and the mail was piling up in many cities.

In 1968 the situation was so bad within the Post Office that the President of the United States established a commission called the Kappel Commission. This Commission concluded that postal workers deserved the same collective bargaining rights afforded to private-sector workers under the National Labor Relations Act. Congress, however, failed to act on the commission's recommendation.

The Great Postal Strike of 1970 - In March 1970, full-time employees earned about $6,200 to start, and workers with 21 years of service averaged only $8,440. Workers grew increasingly frustrated with Congress' inaction and management's oppression.

So on March 18, 1970, thousands of New York City postal workers walked off the job in protest. Within days, they were joined by 200,000 others in 30 major cities. Mail service ground to a halt and the plight of postal workers was finally brought to the public's attention. The strike was soon settled, with Congress approving a 6 percent wage increase, retroactive to the previous December.

The strike helped the effort to push for the enactment of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970, which granted unions the right to negotiate with management over their wages, benefits and working conditions. In lieu of the right to strike, a binding arbitration process was established for resolving contract disputes.

When the Postal Reorganization Act became law on Aug. 12, 1970, it replaced the cabinet-level Post Office department with the independent United States Postal Service. In 1971, the first union contract between the USPS and its unions was negotiated. Seven postal unions participated in the first collective bargaining session. Seeing the need for a united front, five postal unions the United Federation of Postal Clerks, National Postal Union, National Association of Post Office & General Services

Maintenance Employees, National Federation of Motor Vehicle Employees and the National Association of Special Delivery Messengers—merged to create the American Postal Workers Union in July 1971.

In the first contract, a starting postal worker's salary was raised to $8,488. Four decades of struggle had finally brought dignity to hard working postal workers in the form of living wages, necessary benefits, and the ability to retire in with seniority.

Legislatively We Are Working For You

Ever wish you had someone in Washington, DC fighting for you, the average worker?

Join the APWU and you get exactly that!

The APWU's Legislative and Political Department works non-stop with members of Congress and their staffs in the effort to eliminate legislation that harms our members and to enact provisions that aid in our efforts to keep working class jobs we can raise a family on. Educating Congress on the effects of plant consolidations, changing retirement rules, slowing down the mail, federal health plan changes and reduced services to name a few is the never ending task of the APWU. Join the team and join the fight!

As an APWU member you can pool your voluntary political contributions with your brothers and sisters. With our collective strength, we can fight back against corporate-funded politicians and support pro-worker members of Congress and candidates. Our Committee on Political Action (COPA) fund is narrowly focused, voluntary, and a proven force shaping postal policy. Alone, our individual contributions would hardly be noticed, but together we help even the score against large corporate donations. It is a cold hard fact that if we are not at the table... we are on the menu. COPA gets you a seat at the table.

Questions and Answers about the

1. What is the APWU?

The APWU — American Postal Workers Union — is a national organization of employees of the United States Postal Service dedicated to advancing the interests of its members and their families. Representing more than 220,000 postal employees in every state and territory in the United States, the APWU is the largest union of postal workers in the world. It is the exclusive collective bargaining agent for USPS employees in the Clerk, Motor Vehicle Service, and Maintenance crafts. In addition, the APWU represents employees in Support Services, workers in Materiel Distribution Centers, Information Service Centers, Mail Equipment Shops, and Operating Services Facilities.

2. What does the union do?

The primary job of the union is to negotiate, interpret, and enforce a National Agreement with the Postal Service. This is a contract that establishes wages, working conditions and other benefits for all workers under its jurisdiction. The union also protects workers' rights by representing them in day-to-day problems on the job such as discipline, violations of seniority, harassment, discrimination, or other management abuse. Additionally, the APWU addresses other workplace concerns such as safety and health and the impact of technological change.

3. What are the benefits of belonging?

Membership in the APWU gives you a voice in determining your future. Members have the right to participate in local meetings, to vote for local and national officers, to vote on the contract, to run for office, and to petition for change in the union.

Other membership benefits include: The American Postal Worker, a bimonthly magazine reporting on issues and programs affecting postal workers, and a safety and health program that educates workers about possible hazards in the workplace and provides technical assistance. Plus, members are eligible for: The APWU Health Plan, which provides comprehensive coverage at a very reasonable cost; benefits such as a mortgage program; APWU MasterCard; Group Legal Services; Term Life Insurance; Short and Long-Term Disability Plans; Supplemental Hospital Cash; Accidental Death and Dismemberment benefits; Basic Care Hospital Plan (not available in New York); a Dental Plan, and more! In addition, scholarships — college and vocational — are awarded to qualified and outstanding APWU members and children of APWU members.

4. Who can join?

APWU membership is open to any USPS employee, regardless of race, color, creed, sex, sexual orientation, nationality, disability, political affiliation, age or religion. Those in supervisory or management positions can join only in order to receive APWU's Health Plan.

5. Who makes the union work?

You do! The members: Every level of the APWU operates democratically on the principle of majority rule. Members have a free voice and vote to express their views in the union. All local, regional, and national officers are elected by the members, as are the officers and business agents in each craft/division. Members also ratify the National Agreement and elect delegates to the National Convention.

The convention, which convenes every two years, is the highest governing body in the union. Between conventions, the National Executive Board directs union policy and programs.

6. How is APWU structured?

Most members belong to a local union with jurisdiction in their city, town or area. Locals elect their own officers and conduct their own day-to-day business. They may establish local dues and may negotiate a local contract — on specific local issues — to supplement the National Agreement.

Nationally, the APWU maintains a headquarters in Washington, DC, to administer the union and to implement programs and policies mandated by the convention and the National Executive Board.

The national resident officers include the president, the executive vice president, the secretary-treasurer, the director of industrial relations, the national division officers, and department directors and officers, all of whom work under the general supervision of the president. Various departments are responsible for handling specific administrative functions and providing special services to the membership — Legislative, Organization, Research & Education, Human Relations, and APWU Health Plan.

We have a separate division for each craft — Clerk, Maintenance, Motor Vehicle Service, and Support Services — concerned with the special problems of the workers in the craft.

In addition to national officers, each division has representatives called national business agents. They operate out of 21 APWU field offices. Regional coordinators maintain an office in each of five regions: Central, Eastern, Northeast, Southern, and Western.

7. How are officers elected?

National union officers are elected by mail ballot of the membership every three years. The officers and national business agents for each craft division are elected by the members in that division. Additionally, regional coordinators are elected by the members in each region. Any member may become a candidate for national office by filing a petition in accordance with the requirements spelled out in the APWU Constitution and Bylaws.

8. How much are dues?

Dues vary from local to local. They include national dues established by the National Convention and local dues determined by the local union. After you've joined APWU by completing Form 1187, dues are automatically deducted from your paycheck. Your steward or local officer can tell you the cost of dues; they will, of course, appear on your pay stub.

9. How are my dues spent?

National dues pay for all the operating expenses of the union, including contract negotiations, grievance handling above the local level, and the cost for arbitration at the regional and national levels. Members' dues also cover the cost of publications, legal fees, legislative activities, education and training, and community service programs.

American Postal Workers Union

10. How does the union negotiate the National Agreement?

The APWU has a National Negotiating Team composed of the president, the executive vice president, the director of Industrial Relations, and the directors of the crafts we represent. This team meets with Postal Service management several months before the contract expires. The team proposes contract language, the Postal Service responds, and through the give and take of negotiation, they try to reach agreement.

11. Do I get to vote on the contract?

Yes. A negotiated National Agreement becomes valid only with approval by the membership through a mail ballot. After the National Negotiating Team reaches agreement with the Postal Service, a Rank and File Bargaining Advisory Committee reviews the proposed contract. If they approve it, the contract is sent to the entire APWU membership for ratification. If the committee is not satisfied, it can return the contract to the National Negotiating Team to reopen negotiations.

12. What about strikes?

The APWU believes that the right to strike is an inalienable right of all American workers. However, federal law prohibits strikes by postal and federal employees and requires that if contract negotiations do not result in agreement, unresolved disputes are to be submitted to arbitration — to an impartial third party — for resolution.

While our position is "no contract, no work," the 1982 APWU National Convention authorized our national leadership to continue negotiations past the contract deadline if they feel this is necessary to reach agreement, but only as long as postal workers continue to be covered under the previous contract. Thus, the APWU views the strike as a weapon of last resort to be used only when all other means of reaching agreement have been exhausted.

13. Suppose I have a grievance?

If you have a grievance — if you believe that management has violated your rights or subjected you to harassment or discrimination — you should immediately talk to your steward about the problem. The steward, who is your union representative on the work floor, will determine whether a violation has occurred and will try to reach a settlement with your immediate supervisor. If this effort fails, the union can appeal management's action to a higher level. If all these efforts fail to result in a satisfactory solution, the union may insist that an impartial arbitrator settle the dispute.

14. What about job security?

As spelled out in our National Agreement, all career postal workers have a lifetime guarantee of job security after six years of continuous service.

15. How is APWU fighting privatization?

Privatization is the Postal Service's attempt to contract-out postal work — your work — to private companies that hire low-wage, non-union workers. The APWU has been successfully fighting efforts to privatize postal services for decades. The APWU monitors all management attempts to contract out work that belongs to our bargaining unit and makes sure that the National Agreement is upheld.

In May 1993, APWU won an important privatization dispute at the national level when an arbitrator ruled that Remote Bar Code Sorting (RBCS) work should have been offered to bargaining-unit workers. The Postal Service had contracted the work out to several companies that hired non-union workers at sub-postal wages. As a result of subsequent negotiations between the APWU and the USPS, Remote Encoding Centers are now staffed by APWU-represented postal employees.

16. Is the APWU affiliated with other organizations?

Yes. The APWU is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations (AFL-CIO), a federation of 54 national and international labor unions with a combined membership of 10 million workers.

The APWU also is affiliated with United Network International (UNI), an organization of labor unions representing workers in the field of communications in nations throughout the world.

17. Is the APWU involved in legislation and politics?

Because legislation has an important impact on our members, the union is actively involved in legislative matters. The APWU maintains an effective program to monitor legislation being considered by Congress that will have an impact on postal workers and their families. APWU COPA — the Committee on Political Action — raises voluntary contributions to assist the campaigns of legislators who support working families, and to defeat those who consistently oppose us.

18. How can I find out what's going on in the union?

You can stay informed by attending union meetings and participating in the activities of your local. Remember, you have an equal voice and vote with all other members. Your steward and local officers can answer questions you may have about specific union programs and policies. Additionally, you can stay informed about union activities by reading local and national union publications such as The American Postal Worker magazine and periodic APWU News Bulletins, and by staying tuned to the union's Web site, www.apwu.org.

19. I'm not a member yet. How do I join?

Ask your steward or a local officer for a Form 1187 and fill it out. Part of it must be completed by you, and part by the local. Your union dues will automatically be deducted from your paycheck. You can get more information from your steward or another union officer. If you work in a very small office where you have difficulty getting information, contact the Organization Department, 1300 L St. NW, Washington, DC 20005. The phone number is 202-842-4227.

20. I'm already a member. What can I do to help the union?

It's important to keep in mind that you are the union; members are the lifeblood of the APWU. The best way to improve the union is to get involved. In addition to attending union meetings, consider joining a committee, working to organize non-members, becoming a steward, and volunteering to help in union activities. Your union brothers and sisters will appreciate your participation.

Contract Administration

NEGOTIATIONS

After the 1970 strike and reorganization of the Post Office Department into United States Postal Service in 1971, postal workers were legally permitted to negotiate with postal officials over wages and conditions of employment.

Under federal labor law both parties meet to discuss and act to reach agreement on these work related matters. When agreement is reached by the postal service management and union officials, the product of those efforts is called The Collective Bargaining Agreement, the National Agreement, or simply the contract.

It is a collective bargaining agreement because the representatives of the members are authorized to negotiate and act on behalf of the collective members. Once an agreement is reached, the APWU membership—you— must approve or ratify the contract for it to go into effect.

Our current contract contains more than 400 pages of provisions covering hours, working conditions and wages. Working conditions include assignments and work rules. The contract is administered by the Local, Regional, some state and National Union.

ENFORCEMENT

“Administered” means the contract is interpreted and applied by certified union representatives. These representatives police and enforce the contract. This enforcement takes place at Labor-Management Meetings held between postal and union officials and by giving the employees and/or union representatives the right to file grievances over violations of the contract provisions.

The Contract contains graduating steps under which these grievances are handled. This is called the grievance-arbitration procedure. The Contract declares that the main intent of this procedure is to resolve the grievance at the lowest possible level. The lowest possible level (Step 1) is on the work-floor with you, your supervisor, and your shop steward.

A shop steward is a union member elected or appointed by the Union to be your designated authorized representative and certified by the union management to enforce your rights under our union contract.

If the grievance is not settled at the lowest level, it can be appealed to Step 2 with the Postal Installation Head and the Local Union-designated official, who meet in an attempt to resolve the grievance at that level.

If the grievance is not resolved locally, the matter can be appealed to Step 3 to be discussed and acted upon by National Union Business Agents and Postal Area Labor Relation representatives. If the grievance is still not resolved it may be appealed by the Union to binding arbitration in which a neutral arbitrator will conduct a hearing to determine which side is correct in the application of the contract provisions in dispute and award a remedy.

Not all grievances are suitable to be appealed to arbitration based on the circumstances.

WEINGARTEN RIGHTS

In 1985 the United States Supreme Court upheld a National Labor Relations Board decision in which employee have the right to union representation in investigatory interview.

These rights are known as Weingarten Rights.

In the event you are called into a discussion with management, postal inspectors or an Office of Inspector General (OIG) Agent, and you believe that discipline could result from the interview/discussion read the following statement:

“If this discussion could in any way lead to my being disciplined or terminated, or affect my personal working conditions, I respectfully request that my union representative, officer, or steward be present at this meeting. Without my union representative present, I respectfully choose not answer any questions or participate in this discussion.”

Your Safety and Health at Work

WHAT WORKPLACE EXPECTATIONS DO MEMBERS HAVE?

Postal workers are expected to work in a safe manner, be attentive to duty and to report hazards at work.

WHAT ARE MANAGEMENT'S SAFETY RESPONSIBILITIES?

Management is responsible to provide safe working conditions in all postal facilities where postal workers are assigned and to comply with federal safety laws. Management must also take immediate steps to correct unsafe conditions that are reported.

DOES THE UNION HAVE A RESPONSIBILITY IN REGARDS TO SAFETY?

Yes, the union's responsibility is to cooperate with and assist management in efforts to fulfill their responsibility and to enforce the contractual provisions on safety and health.

HOW DO EMPLOYEES REPORT UNSAFE AND/OR UNHEALTHFUL WORKING CONDITIONS/PRACTICES?

If you believe you are being required to work under unsafe conditions or practices you should:

- Notify your supervisor by filing a PS Form 1767 Report of Hazard, Unsafe Condition or Practice. Identify the work area and facility and briefly describe the unsafe condition you believe exists. Do not use general statements.
- Submit your completed form to your supervisor or safety office.
- Your supervisor is required to immediately investigate the condition and take necessary corrective action.
- Notify your shop steward or local union who will then discuss the alleged unsafe condition with your supervisor.

- File a grievance if your supervisor takes no corrective action to abate the condition during your tour of duty.
- Make a written report to the Union Representative on the Joint Labor-Management Safety and Health Committee to discuss the issue.

WHAT PROOF IS THERE THAT A REPORT OF A HAZARD OR UNSAFE CONDITION HAS BEEN REPORTED?

Pursuant to postal regulations your supervisor is required to state what actions they take to correct the matter reported and issue you the blue copy of the PS 1767 as a receipt and report to you every seven (7) days until the matter is corrected. If management claims there is no unsafe condition you should contact your Shop Steward to ensure safety regulations are complied with.

DOESN'T THE GOVERNMENT PROTECT ME ALREADY?

Not entirely. The government enacts the safety laws but it is the union that helps enforce contractual safety provisions. In addition, an employee or union representative may contact the Occupational Safety & Health Administration and file a complaint if, after reporting a hazardous condition, postal management has not corrected the unsafe condition.

More than 42,000 postal workers are injured at work each year. USPS spends more than $1 billion a year in workers compensation costs and unfortunately postal workers die on duty every year.

Family And Medical Leave Act

BASIC LEAVE ENTITLEMENTS

Eligible employees who work for a covered employer can take up to 12 weeks of unpaid, job-protected leave in a 12 month period for the following reasons:

- The birth of a child or placement of a child for adoption or foster care;
- To bond with a child (leave must be taken within 1 year of the child's birth or placement);
- To care for the employee's spouse, child, or parent who has a qualifying serious health condition;
- For the employee's own qualifying serious health condition that makes the employee unable to perform the employee's job;
- For qualifying exigencies related to the foreign deployment of a military member who is the employee's spouse, child, or parent.

An eligible employee who is a covered servicemember's spouse, child, parent, or next of kin may also take up to 26 weeks of FMLA leave in a single 12 month period to care for the servicemember with a serious injury or illness.

An employee does not need to use leave in one block. When it is medically necessary or otherwise permitted, employees may take leave intermittently or on a reduced schedule. Employees may choose, or an employer may require, use of accrued paid leave while taking FMLA leave. If an employee substitutes accrued paid leave for FMLA leave, the employee must comply with the employer's normal paid leave policies.

BENEFITS & PROTECTIONS

While employees are on FMLA leave, employers must continue health insurance coverage as if the employees were not on leave. Upon return from FMLA leave, most employees must be restored to the same job or one nearly identical to it with equivalent pay, benefits, and other employment terms and conditions. An employer may not interfere with an individual's FMLA rights or retaliate against someone for using or trying to use FMLA leave, opposing any practice made unlawful by the FMLA, or being involved in any proceeding under or related to the FMLA.

ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS

An employee who works for a covered employer must meet three criteria in order to be eligible for FMLA leave. The employee must:

- Have worked for the employer for at least 12 months;
- Have at least 1,250 hours of service in the 12 months before taking leave; and

- Works at a location where the employer has at least 50 employees within 75 miles of the employees' worksite. (this does not apply to USPS employees)

REQUESTING LEAVE

Generally, employees must give 30 days' advance notice of the need for FMLA leave. If it is not possible to give 30 days' notice, an employee must notify the employer as soon as possible and, generally, follow the employer's usual procedures.

Employees do not have to share a medical diagnosis, but must provide enough information to the employer so it can determine if the leave qualifies for FMLA protection. Sufficient information could include informing an employer that the employee is or will be unable to perform his or her job functions, that a family member cannot perform daily activities, or that hospitalization or continuing medical treatment is necessary. Employees must inform the employer if the need for leave is for a reason for which FMLA leave was previously taken or certified.

Employers can require a certification or periodic recertification supporting the need for leave. If the employer determines that the certification is incomplete, it must provide a written notice indicating what additional information is required.

EMPLOYER RESPONSIBILITIES

Once an employer becomes aware that an employee's need for leave is for a reason that may qualify under the FMLA, the employer must notify the employee if he or she is eligible for FMLA leave and, if eligible, must also provide a notice of rights and responsibilities under the FMLA. If the employee is not eligible, the employer must provide a reason for ineligibility. Employers must notify its employees if leave will be designated as FMLA leave, and if so, how much leave will be designated as FMLA leave.

ENFORCEMENT

Employees may file a complaint with the U.S. Department of Labor, Wage and Hour Division, or may bring a private lawsuit against an employer. The FMLA does not affect any federal or state law prohibiting discrimination or supersede any state or local law or collective bargaining agreement that provides greater family or medical leave rights.
