The Postmaster General says USPS could run out of money within a year. An immediate step Congress can take is to raise the Postal Service's borrowing limit.

This limit has been stuck at $15 billion since 1992. Adjusted for inflation, the borrowing limit should be between $35-40 billion. Unlike private companies, USPS cannot access traditional lines of credit. Instead, it can only borrow from the U.S. Treasury.

Call the APWU Legislative Hotline at 844-402-1001 and tell your Congressional representative to raise the Postal Service's borrowing limit from $15 billion to $35-40 billion.
